Fund Manager Commentary

November was one of the strongest months for investment returns on record as Pfizer and BioNTech were the first major group to announce successful phase 3 vaccine trials. This news broke shortly after Joe Biden was declared the victor of the US presidential election which in itself was driving markets higher with his market and economic growth promises. With the end of the Covid-19 pandemic in sight, global equity markets gained 9.6% (FTSE World) whilst bonds were weaker as gilts generated narrow losses but corporate bonds managed a slight gain. The fund outperformed in Overseas Equities, UK Equities and Bonds but asset allocation was the main factor for underperformance with the 19% allocation to bonds. In equities, the weak sectors of the year became the strongest performers over the month with Oil and Gas leading the way. Financials were also particularly strong with the rising yield curve aiding banks' and insurers' margins and profitability. Both of these effects were illustrated in the individual holdings with Legal & General and Royal Dutch Shell the strongest performers. Another key contributor to the fund's strong absolute returns were European equities where value investments experienced a strong rally with a reflation trade underway.
